

Architect: Huntington, Glen Wood
Birth/Death Dates: 1856-1943
Practice Dates: 1888-1893; 1897-1938

Biographical Information

Glen Wood Huntington (1865-1943) was born in Bunker Hill, Illinois, and educated in Waterloo, New York. He originally came to Denver in the late 1870s to work for the First National Bank but in 1880 moved to Texas to become secretary of the Lewis & Wheeler Lumber Co. In 1888 he returned to Denver and opened an architectural practice. Prosperity remained elusive and with the financial crash of 1893, Huntington returned to the Texas Lumber Co. He reopened his Denver practice in 1897 and went on to establish a prolific career lasting until his retirement in 1938. A licensed architect and member of the Colorado A.I.A., Huntington raised two sons who followed him in the profession - Glen H. and Henry Whitney. He died in 1943 and was buried in Denver's Fairmount Cemetery.

Glen W. Huntington designed two Denver fire stations and an addition to Denver's Berkeley School, but he derived the majority of his income and fame for his single-family residential designs. He worked in a wide variety of styles from architectural revivals to modern designs popular in the first third of the twentieth century. His design versatility ranged across Classical, Colonial, Tudor and Renaissance revivals, upscale versions of the Foursquare and Bungalow, and includes two of Denver's finest examples of Prairie Style houses.
