REMOVAL FROM NATIONAL REGISTER

Columbian School
1026 West 6th Street
Las Animas, Bent County, Colorado
[NRIS Reference #04000665]

The Columbian School was listed in the National Register 9 July 2004 under Criterion A and C for its historical and architectural significance. The school was associated with the educational development of several generations of Las Animas area children. Beginning in 1917 and continuing through 2003, the building served as one of the community's two elementary schools. A 1936 compatibly-designed addition expanded the school's capacity and its educational mission with the inclusion of junior high classes. The building was a good local example of the Mission Revival Style as adapted to a school. In addition to its use of such character-defining elements as the arcaded walkway and curvilinear gables and parapets, the school is particularly noteworthy for its interior courtyard. This classic Hispano building plan is rarely seen in school buildings, particularly in those built well into the twentieth century. The 1936 addition presented an alternative interpretation of the style.

The former elementary school was demolished in February 2006. The Columbian School ceases to meet the criteria for listing in the National Register due to the loss of those qualities for which it was originally listed.

REMOVAL FROM STATE REGISTER

Columbian School
1026 West 6th Street
Las Animas, Bent County

The Columbian School was listed in the Colorado State Register when it was listed in the National Register on 9 July 2004. The building was nominated under Criterion A and C for its historical and architectural significance. The school was associated with the educational development of several generations of Las Animas area children. Beginning in 1917 and continuing through 2003, the building served as one of the community's two elementary schools. A 1936 compatibly-designed addition expanded the school's capacity and its educational mission with the inclusion of junior high classes. The building was a good local example of the Mission Revival Style as adapted to a school. In addition to its use of such character-defining elements as the arcaded walkway and curvilinear gables and parapets, the school is particularly noteworthy for its interior courtyard. This classic Hispano building plan is rarely seen in school buildings, particularly in those built well into the twentieth century. The 1936 addition presented an alternative interpretation of the style.

After several years of protests and arguments over the fate of the historic building, the former elementary school and a nearby band cottage were demolished in February 2006.

This amendment requests the removal of the Columbian School from the Colorado State Register of Historic Properties. The property no longer retains those qualities which led to its listing in the State Register.
